

27 August 2014 – Fourteen years ago world leaders adopted the Millennium Development Goals with the deadline of 2015 to meet these goals. As this date approaches rapidly, and the MDG's are to be followed by the SDG's (Sustainable Development Goals), the question on the minds of many is: what next, and how?

Secretary General Ban Ki-moon has made climate change action a priority of his administration and has identified it as the main threat to sustainable development. Yet, in this threat he has also acknowledged the opportunity it provides, "With enlightened action, we can create jobs, improve public health, protect the environment and spur sustainable green growth".

Climate Change gets higher profile in new SDG's
