

Imagine a poor country, ravaged by war, where half of the hospitals and schools are closed, and every other child is stunted. Drinking water is scarce and so is food. Government officials have not been paid since August and a third of the population depends on humanitarian aid. This country exists: it is Yemen.

There are few images, and the access of journalists is limited. In today's world of an overflow of images and information, the Yemen is a forgotten crisis. Since the escalation of violence in March 2015, the humanitarian situation continues to deteriorate.

Yemen: the unbearable silent death of a suffering nation
